Forewords

I congratulate FNF and CPDI for taking an important initiative regarding Democratic Local Governance in Pakistan and completing the program activities in the target districts. The time for withdrawal of resources from the program has arrived. Finalizing a program exit strategy is essential by taking the IPs on board and considering their inclinations and limitations for implementing the sustainability activities after the withdrawal of resources.

The concept of exit strategy is still at a nascent stage in the development sector of Pakistan. Conceptually, I am convinced that a blueprint of exit strategy should be included in the grant proposal, the strategy should be finalized in the first six months of the project (for a larger project of 3 to 5 years), and implementation should start from the year 1. It is heartening to note here that the capacity building of IPs began in year 1 and continued throughout the program. A glimpse of these activities is shown in table 2 of this document.

Sustainability for the development sector's initiatives is an important consideration. Most of the time, a section on sustainability is included in grant proposals. Still, this sustainability seldom translates into an actionable exit strategy, and in the end, the sustainability of the project's achievements remains nothing more than a wish list. No doubt, exit strategy and sustainability are often used as synonyms in development literature; a well-crafted exit strategy, however, equips the community or field partners with a variety of information required to implement the strategy. A good strategy should have a chalked-out list of tasks or activities, timelines for the task, and resources, including the human resources required to implement the strategy.

An exit strategy is implementing the agency's strategic plan to sell the ownership to the community (IPs in the context of DLG). No project can continue for an indefinite time. The donor and implementing agencies' support had to be withdrawn at a certain point. It is always sane to start planning for that moment from day one. The development agencies broadly undertake two types of projects in Pakistan: Service Delivery and Governance related. While it is sometimes possible to withdraw entirely from service delivery projects without transferring the ownership, a total exit from a governance-related project without transferring the ownership can jeopardize the project's achievements. It can be counterproductive to the sustainability of the project. In governance-related projects like DLG it is unlikely to achieve the intended results entirely by the end of the funding cycle. In such a situation, it is wise to think strategically and devise an exit strategy so that the achievements of the previous year should not go waste and things should keep moving towards greater sustainability.

In development literature, the standard definition of exit strategy is the withdrawal of all human and financial resources from the project by implementing agency. This approach is not advisable, at least for governance projects. Most of the development sector in Pakistan works on a donor-funded model with minimal indigenous resources at the disposal of CSOs. This is true both for national-level organizations and small community-based organizations. Some service delivery projects might have income generation components, making it easy for the implementing agency to withdraw entirely by transferring ownership to the local community. Governance-related projects like DLG do not have room for creating any such structure. Under such circumstances, it is difficult for organizations to pour their resources into sustainability. In projects like DLG, where there are several IPs from multiple districts, one solution can be to draw them into networks (provincial or National) by the end of the program and put some financial resources at the disposal of the network to implement post-program activities. The establishment and cementing of the network will have an in-built mechanism to provide sustainability to the program's initiatives, and organizations will continue to learn from each other experiences. Both funding agencies and implementing agencies should start thinking seriously on these lines.

Introduction to the Project

The project's overall objective is to improve the quality of life of the citizens of Balochistan, Khyber Pakhtunkhwa, and Sindh Provinces by strengthening democratic local governance. The project is jointly implemented by the Friedrich Naumann Foundation for Freedom (FNF) and the Centre for Peace and Development Initiatives (CPDI) with the help of Implementing Partners (IPs) in 15 districts. One crucial structure created by the project is the District Interest Group (DIG) in each target district. The DIG consists of active citizens, media practitioners, civil society representatives, and government officials. The DIG members played a crucial role in implementing the activities. They also act as a critical mass in the districts through which the project will seek sustainability in the post-implementation period.

The following table presents an overview of the activities undertaken during the project:

Purpose of this Document

The objective of this document is to draft an exit strategy, in consultation with the IPs that can provide sustainability to the initiatives taken during the program implementation in the last 4.5 years in target districts.

The following questions were considered while developing the Exit strategy:

1. How strong is the commitment and sense of ownership in IPs? Due to many factors, including government regulations and availability of resources, the commitment level can differ amongst IPs.
2. For how long do IPs feel comfortable continuing the exit program. We discussed different duration ranging from 3 months to 12 months. In the end, it was decided to design the strategy for 12 months each for Balochistan and KP and 6 months for IPs of Sindh. After the termination of the period, the IPs will think strategically about the continuation of the activities or otherwise. CPDI committed to providing technical support for drafting the strategy for the extension period if there is any such demand from the IPs.
3. How comfortable are IPs and DIGs for taking up certain activities? Have they acquired the technical knowledge and skills to undertake certain activities? As some activities are simple, for example, sending information requests under RTI law or organizing meetings with DIGs and CSOs on local issues, other can be more complex and technical, for example, physical audit of the development schemes and Citizens Report Cards.
4. What financial and human resources and institutional support is available to IPs to execute activities during phase over the stage. Some IPs have already mainstreamed the DLG components in their work, but others are still trying. The level of commitment based on the interest of IPs in the project components will differ for different IPs. No one-size-fits-all exit strategy is possible for all IPs. It is essential first to gauge the partners' commitments and then devise an exit plan accordingly.

Methodology for Exit Strategy

One-day sustainability workshops were held in each target district from May-July 2021. The workshop was attended by Implementing partners and members of the DIGs. In some communities, active citizens (non-DIG members) were invited to the workshops. The objective of the workshops was to review the learning for the past 4.5 years, have further clarity on sustainability, and mutually discuss the ways to take the agenda forward in the post-implementation period.

The sustainability workshops were composed of the following sessions:

- Overview of DLG Project Implementation in (District) 2017 to 2021 (Achievements and lessons learnt)
- Understanding the concept of Sustainability and its Significance
- Summary of Proposal Writing to Generate Funds
- Tips for Making a Successful Sustainability Plan

- Presentations on Future Action Plan by IPs

The IPs were also asked to draft their future action plans to make the workshop more inclusive. They were asked to keep the action plan limited to the program components they liked the most, and they are more comfortable implementing in the field without the support of CPDI. Once IPs presented the action plans, they were discussed among the CPDI staff, IPs, and consultant. The action plans were simplified and aligned with the program agenda, and reasonable timelines were discussed and agreed upon. DIG members were also requested to draw action plans for the coming year. Some did it with genuine enthusiasm and some projects were overly ambitious. The next stage was to synchronize the DIGs members' action plans with the action plans of corresponding IPs to develop a single action plan for the district. The consultant did this and drafted the Exit Strategy for every district based on the action plan.

This document contains 15 separate Exit Strategy documents paced province-wise in alphabetic order. Each Exit strategy includes five types of documents:

Exit Strategy Diagram: The Exit strategy diagram shows which components of the program an IP would like to sustain further. The CPDI management is mindful that every IP will neither have human resources nor financial resources to work on every program component. It was, however, tried to spread the components in all the IPs of a province smartly so that the provincial exit strategy presents a complete picture of the program. The diagram also shows which part of the component will be sustained. The diagram also gives the information on who will take the lead (IP or DIG or Both) for the specific detail and what capacity-building activities have so far been executed during the project implementation period.

Tasks: The task document gives detailed information about the task, under what component (module) the task falls, the timeline for the task (Start and due date), and the estimated number of hours spent on the task.

Gantt Chart: Gantt chart is the graphical representation of a task against time.

Task Snapshot Report: Task Snapshot report shows different components (modules) and the number of tasks under each component.

Resource Allocation: Finally, the resource allocation reports tell the HR deputed on the project and the time spent by them each month on the project.

What is meant by ‘Program Exit?’

In the development sector context, “program exit” refers to the withdrawal of all externally provided program resources from an entire program area. In the DLG context, the financial resources being put in by donor agencies (including FNF and EU) either directly or through CPDI or IPs will cease to flow after June 2021. Fortunately, we will not witness a complete program exit from the DLG program. As CPDI has its presence in the area and works on different governance-related issues like budget, right to information, and legislative development, a strong commitment is present to provide technical support to the IPs whenever required. Second, completion of DLG program activities does not necessarily mean severing the relationship between CPDI and IPs, as these IPs are working with CPDI on different initiatives in the area even before the start of the DLG program. This means that technical guidance and collaboration will always be available, especially in more specialized areas like a physical audit of the development schemes, budget tracking, and Citizens Report Cards.

Development Projects exit strategy is a process not an event. For longer projects, it should be finalized within the first six months of the project and its implementation should start in year 1

The Program Exit Strategy

A program Exit Strategy is a plan describing how the program intends to withdraw its resources while ensuring that the achievement of the program goals (relief or development) is not jeopardized, and that progress towards these goals will continue. In the form of DIGs' activism, it also has a contingency plan¹ for the project so that activities continue to take place if CSOs face any difficulty in the field due to shrinking civic spaces, or due to non-availability of human resources, or halting of activities due to ever-increasing government regulations.

Two critical components of exit strategy are worth mentioning here. The implementing partners have committed to approaching funding agencies for DLG-like initiatives in the area. That is why proposal writing training has been an essential part of the IPs' capacity building, and many of the IPs have committed to submit at least two proposals on governance-related issues in the coming months. One essential prerequisite of submitting successful proposals is the minimum financial standards that every grantee should comply with. With the financial training provided by the FNF and continuous handholding during the program implementation by FNF and CPDI, the IP can now be confident in their financial procedures and can pitch a strong proposal on governance issues.

The Approach to the Exit Strategy

Three different exit approaches are prevalent in the development sector.

Phasing down: A gradual reduction of program activities and building the capacity of local organizations (IPs in DLG context) to sustain program benefits.

Phasing out: a complete withdrawal from the program without handing it over to another organization or the community.

Phasing over: When Implementing Agency transfers the implementation of program activities to local partners (in this case, the IPs). While the program benefits of governance-related projects are unlikely to obtain within the project life cycle, phasing out is sometimes counterproductive for the DLG-like program. CPDI employed a combination of phasing down and phasing over approach for the exit from the program. It is noted that planning for that phasing over started from the very first year of the project, which is indeed a perfect practice.
