

A project is complete when it starts working for you, rather you working for it.

Common Mistakes During Project Monitoring

- Relaxing your standards 'just for the last time' in the hope that project will soon be on track
- Confusing 'regular updates' with 'micromanaging' and avoiding constant interaction with project team with the fear of annoying them
- Missing the element of mentoring from monitoring; monitoring without mentoring can be the the world most hated job
- Focusing too much on benchmarks, quantitative indicators and other raw data and missing the human element and qualitative aspects in the process of monitoring

We also provide services to the foreign agencies who do not maintain offices in Pakistan and implementing the project through local implementing partners.

What is Project Monitoring

In simplest words, monitoring is tracking the actual project performance with the planned project activities against pre-defined targets. The role of the monitoring is to suggest appropriate a) change, b) preventive measures, c) corrective actions and/or d) defect repair (Rework) when the project's performance deviates significantly from the original plan.

How we do it?

Our services include development and revision of Log frame/Project Result Sheet, development of MEAL framework, operationalising the MEAL plan, Information Management and data analysis, monitoring of field activities, periodic reporting on monitoring, meetings with program staff to discuss the project progress and mutually agreed solution if the project is deviating from the path, or if the re-structuring is required.

Benefits of Project Monitoring

Monitoring is a continuous process. Timely and consistent monitoring can keep the project on track and can result into best performance during project impact evaluation.

Why External Project Monitoring?

The internal monitoring process seldom pay dividends to the NPOs. It either results in procrastination or ends up with endless differences between program and monitoring teams. MAHER's External Monitoring provides you a chance to bring greater objectivity to your project monitoring by employing a neutral and professional team. MAHER's External Monitoring is also an affordable solution for the organizations who cannot support full monitoring team due to shortage of resources. We also provide services to the foreign agencies who do not maintain offices in Pakistan and implementing the project through local implementing partners.
